Garden helps understand nature

Children learn of seasons

By Suzanne Sproul

Red and yellowish leaves gently floated to the ground when a breeze blew through the trees at the Rancho Santa Ana Botanic Garden.

In case you haven't noticed, it's fall. When you're a preschooler, though, Mother Nature's annual ritual can be lost between visions of Thanksgiving dinner and plenty of presents under the Christmas tree.

"The Magic Garden" at the Claremont center is designed to help make nature's plan a bit more understandable.

The program is designed to provide an enjoyable outing for children and their parents and to help foster a better appreciation of nature. It is scheduled the third Wednesday of each month between October and May.

So who best to explain the season than Crawford the Crow and some of his garden friends during a puppet show.

Crawford told the students that trees lose their leaves in anticipation of winter. The green chlorophyll in the leaves is used up by the plant. The leaves' colors change (because other chemicals in them remain) and in most instances, they fall to the ground.

The leaves then provide a snug winter home for small ground animals and decayed fertilizer for the trees.

But most preschoolers can't pronounce chlorophyll or understand the process of photosynthesis, so garden docents spent the rest of the morning guiding the children and their parents through the 40-acre-plus facility for some hands-on learning.

The group stopped at stations throughout the front section of the park, each illustrating different aspects of fall. The children were able to make crayon leaf imprints, match garden objects (leaves, acorns, pine cones) to colored figures on a felt board, learn about various birds and their calls and view examples of fall leaves.

"We want the children to come out with their parents and simply explore the gardens here and nature. Some are too young to understand some of what we're talking about but they can have fun," said Dawn Wass, who guided one of the several small groups of children and parents.

"We want to guide them and show them things they can look for. We give them ideas to follow up with some activities at home," she said.

Garden personnel suggest the following home activities:

- Making leaf mobiles. Make a leaf rubbing on a small piece of colored construction paper.

Remove the taped leaf from the paper. Cut out the paper leaf. Repeat for four more leaves. Then cut five pieces of yarn — one as long as your hand, two as long as your arm and two more as long as your arm. Dab glue on each leaf and put the end of one piece of yarn on the glue of each leaf. Dry. Tie other end of yarn pieces (with leaf attached) to coat hanger in various places. Hang and enjoy.

- Make greeting cards with leaf sprigs. Gather different leaves from your yard. Place leaf on index card. Cut piece of clear contact paper 1/2-inch larger than card. Peel off the backing of contact paper. Carefully place contact paper on leaf side of card. When positioned correctly, press contact paper down firmly. Fold edges under the card. Mount card with glue on folded construction paper.

Located on College Avenue off Foothill Boulevard just east of Indian Hill Boulevard in Claremont, the garden is open daily from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Recycling centers' business picking up

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Not all the grocery lot recycling centers are in yet, but those that are do a pretty good business, operators say.

"It was pretty slow at first. I used to just sit down and listen to the radio. Now I get up. I have to work," said Steve Williams, who runs the recycling trailer in the Alpha Beta store parking lot in Upland.

Operators initially reported slow going in October — the first month of the three-month start-up period of a new state law requiring grocery stores to collect the aluminum cans and glass and plastic bottles bearing the "CA Redemption Value" sticker.

The law requires stores doing $2 million business annually to make sure there's a center within a half-mile radius. Although the penny refunds became available Oct. 1, stores aren't required to have the centers in until Jan. 1.

So far about 850 of the expected 2,000 centers have opened statewide, according to a state spokesman.

However, people were lining up in front of Paul McMahon's trailer in the Ralph's parking lot in Ontario last week. Whether it's a woman bringing in her Boy Scout son's newspaper collection to a man with a trash barrel full of beer bottles, which he claimed to have consumed by himself, McMahon is kept busy these days.

"I had one guy bring in a whole pickup full of beer bottles," they weighed 300 pounds on his scale, he said. "He said it was a weekend spree."

State figures on the success of the recycling effort will not be available until the first quarter is tallied in January, according to Dennis Winger, spokesman for the recycling division of the Conservation Department.

However Reynolds Aluminum, which operates trailers at local Stater Bros., Sun Value and independent stores, has its own figures for October.

Statewide, the company collected 21.7 million cans, 103,000 glass bottles and 7,500 plastic bottles, according to regional manager Peter Whited.

ENVIPCO California Inc. which has machines and/or manual centers in front of Vons and Lucky stores, reported collecting 147,000 cans, 51,000 glass bottles and 6,000 plastic bottles during the first month. Unlike Reynolds, ENVIPCO was set up in California specifically in response to the new law and had no previous customers.

Recyclers view these figures optimistically, saying the recycling movement is growing at the expected rate.

Brockway Glass Co. in Pomona, which collects glass from suppliers and the public, reported a 54 percent increase in glass during October. At least

Upland's developer fees have councilmen in uproar

By Marianne Aiken

Upland is in an uproar over developer fees.

Upland school board members, reacting to "broad-sides" from Upland City Council members, issued a statement last week saying they will continue to charge developer fees to offset the cost of building new schools.

"I've been broadsided by City Council members recently in public," said Trustee Donna Vandersall at a recent board meeting. "There's a great deal of misunderstanding out there that we're trying to gouge the developer."

Board President Frank Guzowski said he, too, was on the receiving end of some comments from City Council members at a recent meeting.

"I think they still believe the hospital is the biggest employer in town with 300 employees," Guzowski said. "I think we need to do better public relations in that area. It's not by choice that we levy developer fees, it's by necessity."

All of the district's schools have relocatable buildings on their campuses to hold an overflow of students, said Associate Superintendent Loren Sanchez. And developer fees are needed right now to help pay for the planned Pepper Tree Elementary School and an addition to Upland High School, he said.

The statement issued by the board says the district is "required by state law to charge the full $1.50 per square foot."

The $1.50 fee per square foot of residential construction and 25-cents per square-foot fee for commercial/industrial development are outlined in a state law that went into effect Jan. 1.

According to the education code, districts are not required to charge the fee to developers, but if they don't charge it to developers, they must come up with the money in some other way.

"You can come up with that money any way you want to, but you do owe it to the state," said Floyd Stork, an educational consultant with the Rancho Cucamonga architectural firm

Loren Sanchez chosen for top schools job

By Marianne Aiken

Loren Sanchez, second-in-command of the Upland Unified School District, has been asked to take the top job when Superintendent George Renworth retires at the end of the year.

Sanchez' selection was announced last week by school board President Frank Guzowski.

"The board is in unanimous consensus that there's no need for us to go outside in search of a person to fill the bill," Guzowski said.

A contract has yet to be drawn up.

"The board will be sending its toughest negotiator to meet with Dr. Sanchez," Guzowski joked.

Sanchez, 52, an Upland native, started teaching in Upland schools in 1958.

"I taught with teachers who taught me," he said.

Sanchez became a principal in 1965 and moved on to the district office as director of special programs in 1972. Four years later, he became the assistant superintendent for instruction and has been associate superintendent since 1985.

Sanchez said one of his goals is providing a comprehensive staff development program "to help teachers reach their potential so that in turn they can help students reach theirs."

Updating facilities, housing students, and looking at the implication of technology in the instructional program are some other ongoing issues in the district, Sanchez said.

"Two issues seem to always be there: applying in the classroom what research says is good instruction. The second one is school finance."

Sanchez is taking the helm just after a major change in the district.

Voters decided last year to pull Upland High School out of the Chaffey Joint Union High School District, creating a new unified district in Upland. The move nearly doubled the budget for Upland schools and the student population grew by some 3,000 students.

Renworth stayed on through the first year of unification, then last month announced his retirement effective July 1.

Sanchez had words of praise for Renworth.

"He certainly has been a big part of the success of this district," Sanchez said.

Fees

Wolff Lang Christopher Inc. "The only other option the school district would have, though, would be to take it from some other fund. Unless there's some other fund, it means you take it from the general fund, which means you take it from the educational program."

City Councilman Al Canestro, when contacted last week, said he recently attended a meeting with Assemblyman Bill Lancaster, R-Lake Arrowhead, where Lancaster said school districts don't have to justify why they're charging the full amount.

"Lancaster indicated the $1.50 is kind of a maximum number that school boards can charge," Canestro said. "I'm not saying the school district doesn't need the money."

Canestro said he has a problem with the developer fee for a different reason.

"The only problem I have with the fee is the city of Upland has been in the position where they were getting ready to establish a fee of this type and the school district beat us to it," Canestro said. "The problem is if we go ahead and increase the fees, it would be on top of what the school district is already doing. It would certainly increase the price of houses."

Canestro said the City Council is awaiting the outcome of a study before it determines the level of fees that will be charged "based on the cost of performing city services."

Another councilman, Bob Nolan, has a unique perspective on the issue because he also is principal of Upland Junior High School.

"I think on these developer fees, it's justified that if the school district is being impacted, the fees need to be applied," Nolan said. "It's like our traffic. It's worse now than it's ever been and it's going to get worse. It's the same with developer fees. If they're going to have to put a large development in the city of Upland, they're going to have to pay their way."

part of that can be attributed to the new law, said president Don Even.

Although aluminum and glass by far outshine plastic returns, the public is beginning to catch on.

"It's a pretty good start (with plastics) considering there's not been a lot of hoopla on the bill," Whited said.

"Aluminum has the history of recycling behind it that the others don't. Because it's smaller, lighter, more compact, people prefer it," explained Bill Shireman, executive director of Californians Against Waste, an environmental group instrumental in the passage of the bill.

Because of scrap value, people can get a higher rate for their cans and bottles than plastics at some centers, he said.

Despite the reported low profile of the centers, there seems to be a growing awareness of the recycling law.

It's been a slow but sure increase at the Reynolds plant in Rancho Cucamonga, which processes all the aluminum for the company in Southern California, according to area business manager John Griffin.

"We've experienced some increase because of heightened awareness," Griffin said. "Some people knew (about recycling) before, but didn't do anything consciously."

Those becoming aware range from those bringing in a few newspapers and bottles every couple of days to heavy partiers, according to Williams at the Alpha Beta center.

"I have 20-year-old college guys coming in with cases (of empty beer bottles) saying, 'Yeah, we had a party last night,'" Williams said. "He had enough (refund) to buy another six-pack."

County denied $1.3 million grant for electronic monitor program

State officials denied a request by San Bernardino County for a $1.3 million grant, putting the brakes on a new program that would electronically monitor narcotic offenders in their homes.

Tom Mangrum, assistant chief of the county Probation Department, said that San Bernardino and Riverside counties were denied grants that were earmarked for the District Attorney's offices and law enforcement agencies in the Inland Empire.

The decision was made last week.

Mangrum said $50,000 was scheduled to be used in a new program to electronically monitor narcotic offenders ordered in custody at their residences.

About 20 offenders were targeted for the program,

Mangrum said. If the program was successful, it would be expanded to other offenders eligible for residential custody.

"This was a one-time grant and there is no way to appeal it," Mangrum said. "We won't fund that (electronic monitor) program now."

Mangrum said he doesn't know the reason for the denial but that many Southland counties were denied the grant.

Charges filed against owner of dogs

By Candysse Miller

Charges were filed last week against the owner of two pit bull dogs that attacked an animal control officer and later were shot and killed by Upland police officers.

Dog owner Steven Holt was cited for allegedly ignoring the city's leash and license laws, for operating a kennel without a permit and maintaining vicious dogs, according to the San Bernardino County District Attorney's Office. He will face arraignment Dec. 15 in West Valley Municipal Court.

The infractions are punishable by fines.

Tree-lighting rite planned on Sunday

Montclair's Christmas Tree Lighting Ceremony will be held at 7 p.m. Sunday in the courtyard of the Foundation for History and Art caboose next to City Hall at 5111 Benito St.

The event, sponsored by the Community Action Commission, is open to the public.

The penalties are the maximum allowed against animal owners by current city law, but Police Department officials say they are planning to recommend beefing up vicious dog laws in the wake of the attack.

Holt's dogs allegedly attacked Upland Animal Control Officer Walt Coursey Nov. 14 when the officer responded to a call that three of Holt's pit bulls, including a 6-month-old puppy, were chasing people around the neighborhood.

When Coursey arrived, the dogs had stopped their pursuit. The puppy was sitting on Holt's front porch. Another of the pit bulls sat on the other side of a screen door, Braden said.

As Coursey prepared to hoist the puppy into the backyard, the other pit bull jumped through an open kitchen window and charged the officer, Braden said. Soon, another adult pit bull charged him from his other side.

Both dogs grabbed onto his arm, and one of them sank its teeth into the marrow of Coursey's arm bone, Braden said.

Coursey and a neighbor screamed until the dogs let go. The neighbor then helped Coursey into his truck, where he radioed for help.

By the time patrol officers arrived on the scene, the dogs had chased the neighbor to the top of the animal control truck.

The dogs soon charged the police officers, who shot and killed the two adult dogs. The puppy was impounded and later released back to Holt, Braden said.

Coursey was to return to light duty at the city's animal shelter last weekend, but he has not fully regained the use of his left hand, said Braden.

Upland City Attorney Don Maroney agreed that city officials should take a look at the ordinance.

"Maybe we should take a look at this to see if there's some kind of criminal penalty for letting those things loose on a neighborhood," he said.

"There's no secret that there's a problem with them."

Animal control officers have had several run-ins with pit bulls in the city — they know many of the dogs by name and are familiar with complaints about the animals, Braden said.

"Our biggest deterrent right now is a civil suit," said Braden. "The law says that if your dog bites, you're accountable (to the person who has been bitten) — no ifs, ands or buts."

RIDE targets drunken drivers for seventh year

By Lori Moody

Throughout the holiday season drunken drivers will be taken for a RIDE for the seventh year in the West Valley.

And that means straight to jail, said Capt. Al Irwin, commander of the Ontario office of the California Highway Patrol.

Irwin joined representatives from five other West Valley law enforcement agencies, the district attorney's office and a number of local politicians last week in Ontario City Hall to kick off this year's RIDE (Regional Intoxicated Driver Enforcement) program.

Keynote speaker Upland Mayor Richard Anderson said that the problem of drunken drivers doesn't get the attention it deserves. He said that the RIDE program will help make the streets safer and people more aware.

"Holidays are for celebration, not for death and destruction," Anderson said.

Considered a "unique" way to combat drunken drivers, RIDE combines officers from different departments in the same patrol cars to cruise the streets.

Using computerized studies, RIDE targets city and county streets where there have been a high number of traffic accidents involving drunken drivers, said

CHP Officer Vivian Firlein.

The program began operating during the December holiday season in 1981 with six officers from the Ontario and Upland police departments and California Highway Patrol.

The team worked weekends during the November and December holiday period and arrested 107 suspected drunken motorists that first year.

Officers from the Upland and Montclair police departments and Rancho Cucamonga sheriff's station since have joined the program.

This year was the first time that RIDE officers were deployed throughout the year.

RIDE officers arrested 329 suspected drunken drivers, issued 204 citations and warned 812 people in 27 days of operating during the first nine months of this year.

In 1986, the team arrested 512 suspected drunken drivers, issued 191 citations and gave 1,360 verbal warnings.

From 1982 to 1986, the population increased by about 17 percent while injury and fatal accidents caused by intoxicated drives increased by 32 percent, according to CHP statistics.

The RIDE team is comprised of 12 officers under the Ex-residents of camp join suit against city

By Lee Peterson

Three former residents of the Rancho Cucamonga migrant labor camp have joined three elementary school districts in suing the city over the approved plan for redevelopment.

The Western Center of Law and Poverty, a quasi-governmental agency, is representing three men who challenge the Redevelopment Agency's strategy for bringing commercial and industrial ventures to the city.

Two new lawsuits exist, one which mirrors the school districts in disclaiming the city's contention that the area — largely the eastern half of the city — is blighted and thus eligible for redevelopment status.

The other lawsuit contends that the city has no right to use the portion of the redevelopment tax increment that is earmarked for low- and moderate-income housing on public improvements in older neighborhoods.

"I think that's clearly invalid," said Western Center attorney Jonathan Lehrer-Graiwier.

The elementary school districts of Etiwanda, Central and Cucamonga are suing the Redevelopment Agency for instituting a redevelopment plan and siphoning away money from the state's budget for education.

Central and Etiwanda have filed one lawsuit and the district of Cucamonga filed another. The pleadings for the suits both claim that the city is not adequately compensating the districts for the growth that the redevelopment plan will induce.

City officials have argued that the district is merely using the lawsuits as a bargaining chip to get a higher percentage of the redevelopment revenues.

The plaintiffs represented by the Western Center of Law and Poverty charge that there is not enough affordable housing included in the plans for redeveloping the area.

Rancho Cucamonga city officials would not agree.

"We've done a lot for affordable housing in this city — more so than most cities... This city has been very responsive to that," said Jack Lam, Rancho Cucamonga's community development director.

Lam pointed out the number of apartment projects constructed in the city, the single and multi-family mortgage bonds which helped first-time buyers. "We have not neglected affordable housing," Lam said.

Part of the redevelopment revenue will be directed toward public works projects in older neighborhoods. When the residents see the city's investment, they will more likely be induced to improve their own property, Lam said.

City and Redevelopment Agency attorney James Markman said he will soon file responses to the lawsuits, but would not discuss the specifics of the response until it was officially filed.

The migrant labor camp closed this year when the land changed hands.

Attorney Lehrer-Graiwer said the center became involved in the suit when the Legal Aid Office in Rancho Cucamonga notified the center.

He said the Western Center approached the plaintiffs, Pedro Carillo, Manuel Prado and Frank Chaffino, who agreed to be parties to the suit.

Lehrer-Graiwer said the center is funded by a federal non-profit corporation and the California State Bar Association.

All attorneys involved in suits against the agency believe their complaints will be consolidated if the litigation goes to trial.

Proposed R.C. day care center still in dispute

By Lee Peterson

A compromise to usher a day care center into one Rancho Cucamonga neighborhood has city officials nodding assent but some residents still shaking their heads "no."

A package of concessions offered by La Petite Academy and the William Lyon Co. has won unofficial support from the City Council, which two weeks ago was hesitant to consider allowing the private day care center to open in the midst of the Victoria planned community.

Legal research of city ordinances determined that a profit-making enterprise would not be excluded from the site.

However, the group of residents who first challenged the proposed center are not satisfied with the plan and a bit disillusioned with the political process.

The offer includes the installation of another acre of city park, a meeting place for a local church for a year of Sundays, and a place for Scout meetings.

The community will benefit the most from the project and the benefits it now brings along with it, said Councilwoman Deborah Brown.

The only other alternative, Brown said, would have been to zone the 1.85-acre parcel in question to allow homes to be constructed.

Since more than half of the site will be converted to a city park and the facility open to community functions and the Victoria Community Church, Brown said La Petite Academy supervision of CHP Sgt. Ron Newton. The team began the night before Thanksgiving, and is expected to work 27 nights from now until the New Year and an additional 30 nights between Jan. 2 and Oct. 1, 1988.

The program received a boost this year in the form of $212,000 in federal funding through the state Office of Traffic Safety.

The money will go toward overtime hours, a nurse to assist with chemical testing, a booking officer to assist with the increased workload at the Foothill Communities Law and Justice Center, tape recorders and tapes to streamline report writing and purchase of promotional material.

As a result, officials hope to increase the number of drunken driving arrests this year, Firlein said.

Developers against R.C. lot size ordinance

By Lee Peterson

When Rancho Cucamonga city leaders started kicking around the idea of a minimum residential lot size ordinance, developers took notice.

Planners in the fast-growing city advocate a requirement to make builders include more elbow room in their future housing tracts.

But developers with an eye on the large open spaces of Rancho Cucamonga are ready to try to convince political officials that a lot size ordinance would have a detrimental effect.

When the City Council began discussing the issue more than a year ago, the Baldy View Chapter of the Building Industry Association offered to pay for a market study of the effect of a minimum lot size requirement.

The study, conducted by the Peat Marwick/Goodkin Real Estate Consulting Group, recently was completed.

In general, city officials have termed the results "predictable."

The majority of home buyers, who are first-timers, would be priced out of Rancho Cucamonga if a minimum lot size ordinance were enacted, the study says.

City Planner Brad Buller said the Peat Marwick researchers went about their duties objectively, but the Planning Commission and City Council must decide if market effects will determine the outcome of the small lot question.

"My opinion is that lot sizes as they are right now are too small and minimum lot sizes need to be established," Buller said.

At present, the city has no minimum lot size on the law books. The smallest lots sit around 3,500 square feet.

Buller supports a minimum of 5,000 square feet. As for square footage of the home itself, the council recently approved a 1,000-square-foot minimum.

The study recommends a minimum home size of 900 square feet.

Councilwoman Pamela Wright said the planning staff will provide a counterpoint to the study paid for by the Building Industry Association, the William Lyon Co. and Lewis Homes.

Wright said she is not convinced that "quality" homes are being erected on the small lots of 3,500 and 4,000 square feet. "I don't see that demonstrated," Wright said.

Day care

would make a fine addition to Victoria.

Nearby residents still don't agree.

Susan Jebbia said she now doesn't hope to stop the center, but the concessions were done in a political fashion that hasn't appealed to her.

"At this point there's nothing to fight about. It's going to go in... I feel like I'm messing with something bigger than me. I'm just a resident, not a political person," Jebbia said Friday.

Brown, who originally had opposed the day care center, said after examining the options and the concessions offered that she could support the La Petite project.

The residents who gathered signatures in opposition to the project do not appreciate Brown's change of heart.

Neither has the small group been pleased with the changing plans for the site originally designated for a church.

Day care center foe Carmen Angelo said the La Petite firm is making an effort to appease the community, but that he would rather see a YMCA or "something the whole community could use."

Brown argued that the center will be something a wide cross-section of Victoria residents will be able to use.

William Lyon Co. Senior Vice President Jim Bailey said he had intended to bring a church to the site on Windrows Loop near Windrows Park, but was unable to do so.

Bailey said Lyon will pay La Petite to allow the church to use the facility. Lyon also will "participate" in the equipping of the adjacent parksite, Bailey added.

Brown said if a church had been found for the site, it likely would have opened a day care facility of its own.
